Why I'm mad at the All American Evening Chef

By Ray Marcano | Monday, April 27, 2009, 11:49 AM

This was a weekend of food decadence, and I, Brother Ray, ate like a starving wild boar.

I hurt myself bad Saturday night at the All American Evening, "Cruisin' the USA" at the Air Force Museum. Chef David Glynn prepared a feast like I haven't seen in ages, with six food stations that satisfied every taste. I started by tasting something from each station, and went back for seconds at my favorites — The Cajun Station's incredible red beans and rice and shepherd's pie; the New England station's pot roast sliders; the seafood station's crab cakes; and the southern station's smoked brisket, collard greens and corn bread. I was so stuffed i couldn't get to the dessert or cheese stations. The only thing that made me mad: there was too much good food and I didn't have the stomach capacity to eat more.

This was a fund-raiser at $65 a ticket, and considering beer and wine were included, this was one of the best event buys of the year, so far (I also loved the Wright State Arts Gala). I left there wishing I could have gotten those red beans and rice to go. Goodness.

So folks: what good buys have you seen, or what do you know that's coming up?
